Sea States, a new documentary film on the importance of the shipping industry is being previewed at CMA Shipping 2020. Sea States, funded by key stakeholders in the maritime industry, shows how shipping is the lifeblood of our global economy. Despite the fact 90% of all consumables arrive by ship, the public remains unaware of the value of this hidden, yet massive industry. Sea States outlines shipping's rich heritage, its commitment to a clean environment, and its adaptation of new technologies for the future. For the film's producer, Tom Garber, this is his 13th maritime documentary. His previous award-winning films have been about commercial fishing, tugboats, boatbuilders, and the Coast Guard. Story consultants for Sea States include Jim Lawrence of Marine Money, Joseph Gross from d'Amico Shipping, and Chris Aversano of Q88 and the CMA.

Tackling cyber security threats within a modern shipping environment

On demand

Smart Operations (On demand)

The shipping sector has traditionally stood apart from the developments in cybersecurity over the past decade. With the majority of critical functions and assets physically isolated by miles of ocean, the need to secure these resources against cyber threats has seemed similarly remote. However, in recent years, this hands-off approach to cybersecurity and assurance has become riskier and ultimately, costlier. As automation, connectivity, IoT, and the value of data is realized within the shipping sector, our presentation will look at how an understanding of the most likely threats faced can be used to meet the IMO's requirements around cyber risk management (deadline Jan 1st, 2021) and how these impact passenger data, logistics and booking systems, and navigation systems. In addition, we will look to answer the following questions:

What lessons can be learned from aviation and other sectors that can be of great help to shipping?

How do you face all the rules and regulations from flag states, the IMO, national laws, class societies, IACS, industry bodies such as BIMCO, and many others?

What should a pragmatic and realistic response be that is relevant?

Cyber Risk – Could this be Shipping's Pandemic?

On demand

Smart Operations (On demand)

There have been hundreds of presentations, commentaries, and news reports in relation to the risk that cyber is creating for our maritime sector. But is what is being reported to us by our lookout a Titanic-esq tip of the iceberg where the greater threat is lying beneath the water line undetected? In this presentation, Julian Clark, chairman of the CMI Cyber Crime Sub-Working Group and Senior Partner of the global law firm Ince will update those attending as to the current perceived level of risk and what may be waiting beneath the waterline. Cyber risk and cyber-terrorism could indeed be one of the greatest threats that shipping has ever faced.

Debunking the myths: What does Blockchain mean for shipping?

On demand

Smart Operations (On demand)

Whether seen as an evolution or revolution, blockchain (together with AI, 3D printing, and machine learning) will bring the biggest change to our sector since the introduction of containers. But what is the truth about blockchain? What is it? What does it do? And how will it change our industry? In this session, Julian Clark will de-bunker the myths, explain exactly what blockchain is, how it will affect change, and whether this will be a good or bad thing for shipping and maritime law.
